VOGUE HOMMES INTERNATIONAL

any more." He has nothing but fond memories of Kennebec, the town where he grew up in a loving family of father, a doctor, mother, a nurse, older brother and younger sister, now sixteen. "It's where I was born, the place I miss most when I'm travelling." As a teenager, Sean was, by his own admission, a handful. "I hated high school and the teachers gave as good as they got. They couldn't stand me [laughs]. I never listened, wouldn't concentrate, was always doing a million things at once. If I could turn back the clock, I'd try and be less of an ass. And I'd apologise to some people. In all honesty, I wasn't the nicest kid in school."

It's easy to imagine O'Pry ruling the roost, the envy of all the geeks. What most sets him apart, though, is a ferocious need to do his own thing. At 16 he wore ripped jeans and shaved his head, rode around town with his buddies, and got into hip hop ("The first time I heard Nelly singing 'Ride Wit Me' it was like, wow!"). Sean has always had a rebellious streak. "As a kid, I would never let my mom get my clothes ready for school, so it was always this big mess. I'd put on cowboy boots and no jeans. Once I wore three sets of underwear. Another time I forgot to wear any at all [laughs]! Some days my mom would come running out the house after me!"

Even now, he hates having people fuss over him. "The idea I can't tie my shoelaces drives me crazy. I can get dressed on my own." However much it "annoys" certain stylists, Sean likes to do things for himself. "I make my coffee every morning at home in New York. Of course it's disgusting and I could buy a much better one from the place downstairs, but things are always better when you make them yourself. I don't think there's anything a person can't do alone. Except change sex. Although come to think of it, you can even do that!"

Which leads us to the question that's been burning our lips. If Sean O'Pry were a woman, who would he be? He answers without a second's hesitation: "My mom." "She's a saint, she always puts other people's happiness first." And someone in the public eye? A female role model? He thinks, then shoots out the answer, grinning: "If I were a woman, I'd be every woman so I could spend my time fondling my breasts." We tell him this is word for word a line by an amazing actor in a classic French film, François Truffaut's Bed and Board. He grins, delighted by his impromptu quote. He says he's heard of New Wave cinema but his personal favourites are '40s and '50s American movies. "Basically, I went from American Pie to Casablanca. I've been a huge fan of Humphrey Bogart, Montgomery Clift, Clark Gable ever since." Does he dream of an acting career? "No. My dream is to watch a runway show. You know I've never been invited [laughs]!"
