NAOUMIE
CAMEROONIAN

Is there an iconic
Cameroonian beauty aid?

If there's one cure-all for everything from scratches to dry patches, it's palm oil. I have memories of my grandmother using it on me from the time when I was very little.

Which part of the palm tree is the oil from?

The kind that's good for skin comes from the kernel, which you mash after removing it from the middle of the fruit.

Have you found palm oil in the States?

The pure oil is harder to find, though it's added to some beauty products. But since arriving here, I've mostly switched to olive oil. While similar, it's lighter and less oily—and you can use it on cuticles, scalp, hair, and limbs for all-over softness.

Are there times when you still have to use your palm oil?

In the dead of winter, when you're more scales than skin, there's nothing better.

THAT SOMETHING SPECIAL

We always love finding the next great thing when it comes to beauty, but sometimes true comfort and results come from returning to our roots. Here, six women share their ancestral beauty secrets, with recipes to make and indulgent products to try.

ANN IRISH AMERICAN

Are you a traditionalist when it comes to your beauty routine?

Yes, like my ma's and grandma's, it's incredibly simple: Wash your face, apply lotion, and always use sunscreen.

Any special treatments?

There is a drink that several of the women in my family swear by for keeping skin clear: barley water. The handwritten recipe still circulates on a tattered index card.

What are the directions?

Boil 2½ quarts of water in a large saucepan.

Add ½ cup of pearl barley, cover, and simmer for one hour. Strain, and add the fruit of 2 lemons and 6 oranges to the barley water. Add brown sugar to taste.

How often should you partake?

I keep a bottle of it cooling in the fridge. A glass a day is supposed to be good for digestion as well as your skin.

JARAH
NATIVE HAWAIIAN
AND KOREAN

What does being born in Hawaii mean for your beauty routine?

It was all about the beach for me. From the salt water (it keeps your skin glowing) to the incredibly moisturizing tropical oils, the local environment provided whatever we needed.

What sort of oils?

Kukui nut oil is arguably the island's best traditional moisturizer and conditioner, but since moving away from home, I've been using another Polynesian oil called monoi. Though officially Tahitian, this gardenia oil is really popular with Hawaiians, too. It smells like the beach and reminds me of my mother.

How do you like to use monoi?

On my skin as moisturizer and to style and condition my hair for a beachy look.

CORINNA GERMAN

Did you learn any beauty secrets from your mom?

That natural ingredients really work. Beer, for example, is great at making your hair bouncy and shiny. So periodically, I'd wash with organic shampoo, rinse, then saturate my hair with Astra, a lager from Hamburg, where I grew up. I'd leave the beer in for 30 minutes, then rinse.

Any other Germanic remedies?

Chamomile, to bring out the blond in my hair. I brew up some fresh chamomile tea and let it steep for a while. Then, after washing and rinsing, I splash my hair with the cooled-off tea, then let it dry—the relaxing scent is a bonus.

Sounds simple!

Yes, but for the chamomile to work, you need to be blond to begin with, or at least blond-ish. The beer trick, however, works for everyone.

Hang loose: Sophistication need not be complicated or confining, as this unstructured satin T-shirt dress from 'S by MaxMara shows ($470). In muted hues, it's a simple, chic choice for day or night. Kimberly McDonald necklace of 18k gold, geodes and cognac diamonds ($51,500); Hermès patent-leather heels ($1,100). Opposite: This sculptural, origami-like white mikado coat by Calvin Klein Collection ($2,495) takes purity of form and color to a glamorous extreme. Abraxas Rex rutilated-rock-crystal Starship ring ($8,800).

Jean Paul Gaultier brings the goddess gown down to earth. This gray jersey dress ($1,795), from a recent collection of dance-inspired looks, is all about ease of movement, even with its careful draping. John Hardy bamboo, sterling-silver and multistone Cinta Collection cuffs (top, $4,900; bottom, about $6,000). Opposite: Donna Karan New York's silk-cotton top and skirt, worn with a menswear-inspired oversized jacket ($2,895) by the same designer, appear to be two separate items, but they're really one dress ($2,295). Fashion can't get any easier than that! GM Collections silver bangles ($700 each) and green-garnet and red-coral rings ($1,250 each). For shopping information, see page 148.

A woman with blonde hair styled in a short, wavy bob is wearing a vibrant red, sleeveless, knee-length dress with a flared skirt. The dress features an embellished neckline with large, ornate jewelry. She is also wearing multiple gold and diamond bracelets on both wrists and several rings. She is posed in a dynamic, slightly turned position against a plain, light-colored background.

Embellished necklines are pretty and versatile: you'll sashay easily from twilight cocktails to late-night dinner and dancing in this flirty, jewel-studded silk-organza dress by Carolina Herrera ($3,290)—an eye-popping blend of persimmon and hibiscus. Paolo Costagli 18k-gold Snake bracelet (on left arm; $30,000); Ippolita 18k-gold and multistone bangles (on both arms; $2,500–$4,750); Nancey Chapman rubellite and diamond Elephant ring (on right hand; $16,000); Roberto Coin gold and diamond rings (on left hand; $1,960 and $2,620).
