Sun City - by Erin Foster

The inspiration for this story was color. I knew I wanted to shoot something with vivid hues and use an African American model. When I started putting the shoot together I had a pretty simple mood board and gave my stylist Ryan creative freedom as she pulled the clothes. I didn't want to micromanage anyone's creativity. My team was made up of all women and they are all super creative people, so I was excited to see what we were able to create together if everyone felt free.

For makeup, Katie brought several colors to try out. We didn't want to overpower the story with too much make up, but the splash of orange mascara just worked so well to add a subtle yet unexpected touch. Nya's eyes are so beautiful and expressive that it's nice to have that kiss of color to add some drama. Katie's make up was so beautiful and was the perfect contrast for the clothing colors.
