"My husband would like this outfit. With the bikini, necklace and chunky scarf, the dress feels grown up."

Keri walks along a promenade in Brooklyn wearing a Theory bikini, Theory dress, White x Warren scarf, White Bear Think Bechance, Cline & Brother by Philip Craig bangles, Kris Bracciale and Yves Saint Laurent bag.

On the weekend Keri Russell can be found in her low-key Brooklyn neighborhood, wearing pretty pieces of her own mixed with something borrowed from her husband's closet. Here, the Bedtime Stories actress steps out in relaxed yet chic looks that keep the Monday blues away

not to be, you know, starsnuck or anything," Julia Stiles says suddenly, stopping herself short midway through a sentence about the finer points of writer David Mamet's metronomic dialogue, "but Jason Biggs just walked in." She stares over her companion's shoulder while the American Pie actor pivots and exits the restaurant as speedily as he appeared.

Sure, it's surprising that Stiles—who, at 22, has acted in over fifteen films, starred in Shakespeare in the Park, and is about to enter her senior year at an Ivy League university—is so interested in the comings and goings of an associate. But it's downright charming that she, like any other cool New York City kid, is afraid she'll seem unsophisticated for that interest. She might be swifly attaining the kind of success that gets a girl hailed as Hollywood royalty (something she'll step even closer to with her portrayal of a monarch's reluctant girlfriend in this month's The Prince and Me), but in reality Julia is sweet, smart, grounded, and, well, real.

That's not by accident. As a girl growing up in SoHo, she was attracted to acting because of the
