◆ In a world where being a male model is seemingly now a rite of passage for any photogenic guy with a social media brand to build, it's easy to forget that back in the '60s and '70s, such a career path was viewed as taboo—and the exclusive domain of women. However, the six gentlemen on these pages, gathered together at The Hollywood Roosevelt hotel by John Pearson (widely regarded as "the world's first male supermodel"), helped to break the mold and change the clichéd view of men in the industry. Proving they still have what it takes, the longtime friends and collaborators—Pearson, Olivier Dehry, Hoyt Richards, Moose Ali Khan, Bruce Hulse and Cameron Albanian—offer today's up-and-coming a lesson in wearing well. "We've got this fundamental history in a business that has changed rapidly," Pearson says. Adds Khan: "The hair is a little grayer bald, but the sparkle in everyone's eyes, the humility and the charm is the same."

STYLE
"There's always some new creation that I can work on to add to my game. Last year I shot a one-footed three. That was kind of by accident—but I liked it. Stuff like that keeps interesting. I don't shoot 100 percent from three, so that's always the motivation."

ON WHO'S THE BEST NBA TEAM IN CALIFORNIA
"Well, the way you judge a team is who's playing last [in the playoffs]—and last year the Golden State Warriors were the last Cal team still playing."

From Pistol Pete to Dr. J, from Air Jordan to King James, the NBA has always been home to SARTORIALLY DARING ATHLETES. But now it's even more than that—it's the most stylish league in all of sports. In the NBA, everyone's a character, with enough room under the big top for guys who rock silk shirts, high-top fades, and one world-famous unibrow. Welcome to GG's tour of the modern, runway-ready NBA. STARTING WITH FOUR YOUNG STARS WHO PLAY BY THEIR OWN RULES— whether they're on the court or all decked out in black tie
