NO-KNOT BRAID

Rather than knotting the hair, weave in strips of fabric to hold the style. It's practical because it keeps your hair off your face, useful because when you take it down you get a cool wave through the ends, and it's a fresher take on the traditional beach braid you've seen a million times before.

NOW DO THIS: Gather your hair into a ponytail on the top of your head using a thin elastic band. Split into two sections, hold far apart, then lay a scarf or fabric strip across the middle to form a cross. Cross each section over to the opposite side, alternating between scarf and hair ends to form the knots. Secure with a no-snag elastic band and pin in place along the hairline.

GRAPHIC ACCENTS

Your hair is likely to get wet, so fussing over the ends is a futile exercise. Concentrate on the top half of your head as you can feasibly keep this from touching water, then when the ends dry you'll get a Pre-Raphaelite, done-but-undone finish. Pick graphic accessories, such as clips and slides, to hold awkward lengths or stubborn textures in place.

NOW DO THIS: Gather your hair into a low half ponytail, scraping it all back away from your face, and catch the ends to secure into a mid-knot. Secure one or two accessories where they're needed – or just where you want them. Dip the ends into the water and let them dry in the sun for extra salty texture.

This page: Top and hairclips, as before. Polyester-mix bikini bottoms, Zimmerman. Opposite: Wool dress, Alexander McQueen.
