ON THE COVER

HANA'S CHARMED LIFE

How this fashion A-lister defines the new ideal of supermodel.

BY LAURIE BROOKINS

Much debate continues in the fashion industry over whether the term "supermodel" carries the weight it once did during the early '90s, when Cindy, Linda, Christy and Naomi ruled the runways. While most style pundits agree that it's unlikely we'll ever again witness the heights of power and glory experienced by that quartet of single-minded supermodels, among the models of today there indeed exist a top tier of A-listers who consistently grace the hottest covers, walk the hottest shows and star in the hottest campaigns—and our cover girl Hana ranks feisty and decidedly among them.

Of course, Hana Soukupova comes with a background as filled as fashion itself. Born in the Czech Republic, Soukupova grew up in the small town of Kladno Vary, where her dreams were focused more on the basketball court than the back rooms of couture houses. It was Soukupova's sister who recognized Hana's potential and sent her photos to a Prague modeling agency, which promptly called to request a meeting. Hana was just 13 at the time. Work in Prague was quickly followed by bookings in New York, Paris and Milan, where the in-demand Soukupova scored the highly coveted opening or closing spots in shows ranging from Versace to Valentino, while photographers such as Steven Meisel and Patrick Demachelle also took notice. She was just 18 when Mario Testino made her the face of Gucci in 2004.

Today the 22-year-old Soukupova is married and lives in New York, but her schedule shows no signs of slowing, with recent appearances in Japanese and Italian Vogue, Elle and now Bal Harbour. All of which proves that Hana isn't merely super; she is, quite simply, superb.
