NSF

NSF's Nick Friedberg and Jamie Haller want their clothes to look and feel like they've been through the ringer. The duo washes, distresses, and dyes every garment (sometimes twice) in pursuit of that lived-in vintage look and feel. It's the epitome of West Coast cool: casual and comfortable, with a little bit of grunge thrown in for good measure. NSF does all the work, you get all the glory.

STAMPD

Forget color and logos. Instead, mix athletic gear with streetwear — and focus on how it all fits. That's the formula for Stampd, Chris Stamp's mashup of West Coast surf culture with East Coast street attitude. The result is a line of futuristic sportswear with a gloriously simple color palette (black, white, repeat).

DAVID HART

David Hart designs sophisticated clothing with a nod to the past. Inspired by the classic midcentury American uniform, Hart updates the impeccable tailoring of the 50s and 60s with modern fabrics and colors. Think suits, topcoats, sweaters, and polos that are retro (without living in the past) and razor sharp (yet easy to pull off).

The original M.Nii—a tailor shop in Hawaii that specialized in custom trunks for serious surfers—closed in 1968. Lucky for us, it was revived in 2011 by designer John Moore, who was inspired by its easy style and commitment to durable construction. Today, the LA-based designer is making waves with soft striped tees, fitted trunks, and even outerwear.
