MODEL: ANGELA LINDVALL AT IMG

SHOT AT LOST ART STUDIO, NYC

Top by Shan James.

Sweet and lowdown

Angela Lindvall gets the soft-focus treatment in these shots by friend and photographer Jesse Shadoan. "I'm definitely inspired by the work of photographers from the '60s and '70s, like Bert Stern, David Hamilton and Sam Haskins' book Cowboy Kate," says Shadoan. "For me it has to do with the way I see women, the way I want to portray them. A lot of fashion photographers these days like to show the model in a very cool, removed, very detached way, but that's not the way I feel about women. I want to show something that's very innocent but sensual and upbeat - as it were - at the same time." Formerly an art director, Shadoan first met Lindvall when he was directing a Craig McDean shoot for FHM. As well as collaborating on shoots, the pair are now working together on a non-profit project called Collage (www.collagefoundation.org): a multimedia offering that aims to put a "pop commercial gloss" on activism, while empowering and enabling kids to get involved. While Shadoan would probably refrain from the Vaseline lens treatment (it contains non-sustainable petroleum), he's definitely at the prow of a more romanticised photographic ethic. "Luckily for me, a certain number of people are into that movement at the moment," he says.
