Do you believe that your background – as a working architect prior to approaching fashion – has had an effect on your design process and collections' sources, many of which draw from twentieth-century architectural and art movements? Yes very much so. My love for modernity and modern spaces not only has influenced my view and process on fashion but also on other fields.

The focus of a good architect extends beyond the building itself to recognise its impact on the space it inhabits, its users and so on. Do you believe a similar ethos can apply to fashion? Yes, design is psychology; spaces can evoke great feelings and change sociology, status, interactions and so on. Fashion should do the same. This is good design.

your label? Do you consider that the attention towards menswear has changed generally since that time?

In general New York is not well respected for interesting design, which was one of the reasons to start a brand here. There are so many more menswear designers (working today) and also men appreciate design more than ever before in the US.

Many of your designs, although urbane and modern, experiment with classical menswear and tailoring. How do you attempt to link your work with this modernity without becoming overly referential?

When you first moved to New York, menswear was very much secondary to women's wear with few smaller menswear designers working in the city. What attracted you to New York to start

SAINT-VICTOR

and Raytell Bridges for StyleWise

He's the latest African American actor to be casted in the CBS television soap opera, The Bold and the Beautiful (B&B). At 31, the Rockland County New York native is ripe for the picking as he's been welcomed back into the folds of the soap world with a fan base of millions following his 2009 departure from cancelled soap opera Guiding Light. Now, a wiser and evolved Saint-Victor chats with Bleu about his many roles as husband, actor, and writer. Yet he's set to dominate his latest role as the strong and willful character Carter Walton, lawyer to the super power Forrester family in B&B. >>

Theater Arts and Film. It's up there with Juilliard. It's a four-year program. We trained and got our butts kicked! When I was working on Guiding Light I couldn't tell anyone while I was going to school there because it's against the rules to work while in you were in school.

WHAT DID YOU HOPE TO BECOME WHEN YOU GOT INTO ACTING? ARE YOU WHERE YOU'VE HOPED TO BE?

When I first got into acting, it was a great time for black actors. We still had The Best Man, Love Jones, Brown Sugar, Dead Presidents... Denzel Washington and Halle Berry had just got Oscars! Now, I still want to achieve all of that and more. I'm very interested in producing, directing and of course acting in some of my productions. I now produce and direct with my wife.

WE KNOW WHAT YOUR LOVE LIFE LIKE IS LIKE AS CARTER BUT WHAT ABOUT AS LAWRENCE. WHEN DID YOU GET MARRIED?

My wife became Shay Saint-Victor in 2007.

WHEN DID YOU KNOW THAT SHE WAS IT?

She inspires me so much. Just knowing that I have a support system and knowing that someone is proud of me but also won't let me off the hook if something I do is crappy. That's my inspiration.

LAST QUESTION. WHERE DO YOU SEE YOUR CAREER GOING IN THE FUTURE?

I want to have a flourishing production company. I really want to create moving pieces of art. I want to be acting in those pieces in others. I want to be Will Smith with a little Oprah sprinkled on top! ★
